HELPFUL HINTS FOR RECOMMENDATION WRITERS

Many College of Charleston students use Career Center credential service for processing their letters of recommendation for employment or for graduate/professional schools. The following suggestions are intended to assist you in writing a strong letter of support for the student.

• Include your affiliation/relationship with the student; how long you have known him/her; and in what context.

• Provide honest and factual information, based upon your personal knowledge/observation of the person through direct contact or obtained from the person’s personnel or student record.

• Specifically identify the student’s skills, attitudes and personal attributes related to their field of study or prospective career.

• Be sure to mention and support the student’s goal (i.e. a teaching position, law school, etc.)

• Avoid giving personal opinions or feelings. If you give an opinion, clearly identify them as opinions and not as facts. If possible, explain the incident or circumstances on which you base your opinion.

• Include concrete examples of the student’s strengths or attributes where possible.

• Do not include information that may be the basis of discrimination, such as the individual's race, color, national origin, age, disability, citizenship status, sex, or marital status.

• Discuss the type of reference that you can provide with the person who has asked you to be a reference. Ask yourself if you can honestly comment on the student’s skills and performance. It would be better to decline to write a recommendation than to write a vague one.
